About the United Way of South Central Tennessee

The United Way of South Central Tennessee is committed to improving lives by advancing opportunities for education, health, and financial stability for all. Through our annual Community Investment and Opportunity Grants, we award funds to nonprofit organizations serving across our 7-county region - Bedford, Cannon, Coffee, Lincoln, Moore, Rutherford, and Warren Counties.

Our grantmaking focuses on supporting programs that serve ALICE (Asset Limited, Income Constrained, and Employed) families and improve their long-term stability and ability to thrive. By investing in evidence-based programs and collaborative approaches, we work alongside our nonprofit partners to create lasting change across South Central Tennessee.

What Are Thriving Community Collaborative Grants?

Thriving Community Collaborative Grants fund innovative services delivered at the Resource Center at Mitchell-Neilson Elementary that work in coordination with United Way staff and other funded partners. Unlike traditional grants where organizations work independently, these grants create a collaborative network of services addressing multiple barriers ALICE families face and require quarterly coordination meetings, shared data collection, and a commitment to working together.

About the Mitchell-Neilson Schools and the surrounding neighborhood

Mitchell-Neilson is a Murfreesboro City School serving 785 PreK-6th Grade students on two campuses within a vibrant, diverse neighborhood in Murfreesboro [see map]. Families in this community work hard but face significant systemic barriers to economic stability:

- 98% of students qualify for free/reduced lunch
- 11% of students are experiencing homelessness—nearly four times the state average of 3%
- 19.7% chronic absenteeism rate, reflecting deeper family struggles with transportation, housing instability, and competing survival priorities
- While 43% of Rutherford County households are below the ALICE threshold, the Mitchell-Neilson school zone is located in an area where that rate reaches 57%—one of the county’s most economically vulnerable neighborhoods
- Families face significant barriers to accessing services due to transportation challenges, work schedules, childcare needs, and lack of resources within walking distance

What We're Looking For

United Way's Resource Center at Mitchell-Neilson provides family support coordination and employment coaching through our Launch Point program. We're seeking innovative programming that complements these foundational services and addresses gaps in the neighborhood, such as:

- Youth development (after-school, summer, mentoring)
- Health services (dental, vision, mental health, chronic disease management)
- Transportation solutions
- Financial empowerment and pathways to stability (credit building, savings, home ownership)
- Early childhood programming or childcare support
- Adult education (literacy, ESL, GED, job skills training)
- Food security and nutrition programming
- Community building and leadership development
- Other creative approaches identified through community engagement

All services must be delivered on-site at the Resource Center at Mitchell-Neilson Elementary and demonstrate how they will coordinate with existing services and other funded partners.

Additional Funding Opportunities: Community Investment & Opportunity Grants

United Way of South Central Tennessee also offers region-wide grant programs to support nonprofits serving ALICE families across our seven-county area:

Community Investment Grants (funding of $10,000 or more) support established or new programs with significant impact potential and comprehensive evaluation plans.

Opportunity Grants (funding up to $9,999) provide flexible funding for smaller-scale programs addressing critical needs in our community through a streamlined application process.

Both grant programs prioritize evidence-based approaches, collaborative partnerships, and programs that address gaps in services. For more information and to apply, visit yourlocaluw.org/grants.
